

JOE GOODE ANNEX

"I hope to create a space to experiment, a space to explore new perspectives on performance as a living and talking art form. San Francisco has always been known as a hotbed for people who are thinkers and visionaries about alternative arts with new ideas around performance. I don't ever want that to go away." - Joe Goode

In April 2011, Joe Goode Performance Group moved into its new home, the Joe Goode Annex, at Project Artaud in the heart of San Francisco's lively Mission District. The 3,200 square foot space houses a 1,500 square foot state-of-the-art dance studio with a sprung and heated floor, and a 24-foot soaring ceiling. The Annex serves as a multi-purpose community resource for classes, workshops, youth outreach, panel discussions, rental space, and the Company's own small experimental performances, including the Human Kind Series. Ongoing renovations to the Joe Goode Annex aim to create one of the newest and most unique studio theaters in the Bay Area.
